

every generation has its great cause
ours is ending AIDS
 bethegeneration.org  Get Involved.

REALHEALTH
 THE BLACK WELLNESS MAGAZINE

advanced

FREE PERSONALS
 SIGN UP NOW

about us

health 411

diet/fitness

relationships/family

celebrity fitness

sex/sexual health

News
 Current Issue
 Archives
 Health Services
 Directory
 Personals
 Blogs
 Forums
 Surveys
 Calendar
 Focus & Fact Sheets
 Contact Us
 Group Rates
 Advertise

Your opinion counts

Do you feel confident that you have proper access to quality health care services?

Yes

No

archives

Click here to discuss!

Food Fighter

Former high school teacher David Roach is bringing black farmers and healthy produce back to urban neighborhoods

My father was a part-time sharecropper, so when I was growing up in rural Texas my family always ate fresh fruits and vegetables. But in low-income or predominately black neighborhoods like West Oakland, California, where I now live, that is not always the case. Grocery store chains will not invest here, claiming high theft and insurance rates. If they do, the stores are not equal to their sister stores in more affluent areas. In some areas, people are forced to shop at corner liquor stores because there is no grocery store nearby.

I started Mo' Better Food in 1998 as a reaction to three factors: the decline of black farmers; West Oakland residents' lack of access to fresh produce; and their alarming diet-related health issues. In California, black farmers make up less than 1 percent of all farmers—and because of discrimination, they have lost both land and money. At the same time, I noticed high rates of obesity, heart disease and all types of cancer in our community, due to poor diet.

I held a conference with church leaders and residents to come up with some solutions. We agreed that black farmers needed a place to sell their produce, and black communities needed fresh food, so having a market is a great way of partnering the two. Our farmer's market is a place where everyone can come together, shop and enjoy the community.

By having cooking demonstrations, passing out recipes and working with catering companies, we hope to change some eating habits and misconceptions while preserving some of our culture. A lot of people will tell me, "Hey man, I will eat greens at my grandma's house, but I don't know how to cook them at home."

Our philosophy is "Healthy Economics." In addition to a market, we want to purchase land to grow crops, develop our own grocery stores and create jobs for residents. We want West Oakland to be a place where you can both work and live.

To start a farmer's market in your community, first try contacting organizations like the National Black Farmers Association (www.blackfarmers.org). Or advertise in your community newspaper that you are looking for farmers. Local schools make good locations. Use senior shuttles for transportation so more people can attend. Most important, get everyone in the community involved to shop and work at the market.

-As told to Kellee Terrell

Real Personals Login

Username:

Password:

sherrylynn

chicago

Nebraska

Get Real Health's
 Newsletter

* Visit Mo' Better Food online at www.mobetterfood.com. For more information about starting a market, read The New Farmers' Market: Farm-Fresh Ideas for Producers, Managers & Communities (New World Publishing, $24.95).

- ▶ POZ.com
- ▶ POZ Personals
- ▶ POZ Mentor
- ▶ POZ ASO Directory
- ▶ AIDSmeds
- ▶ Real Health
- ▶ TuSalud.com
- ▶ ComboCards
- ▶ Rx Info Cards

[about Smart + Strong | about Real Health and Real Health Magazine]

contact us | terms of use | your privacy | advertise | © 2008 Smart + Strong